

ABSTRACT

An optical pickup unit (OPU) includes a moveable structure that is moved by a voice coil motor component in response to an input signal. The moveable structure includes a pattern that is moved corresponding to the input signal. An encoder reads the pattern to generate an output signal that corresponds to pattern movement as the input signal is applied over a period of time. A controller calculates a calibration factor relating the pattern movement to the input signal.